"A good teacher must be able to put himself in the place of those who find learning hard."

– Eliphas Levi

A few words from Donna Qualters

With a Little Help From My Friends

by Donna Qualters, Director, CELT

In the 1960’s the Beatles wrote a catchy little tune with the final lyrics stating “Oh I get by with a little help from my friends, with a little help from my friends”. I’ve been thinking a lot about that as I come near to the end of my tenure as the Director of CELT.

CELT has grown significantly since I arrived in 2012. The amount of programming, the faculty who have come to the center, and even the number of staff, have increased greatly over the last seven-and-a-half years. In academia we take great pride in our individual achievements; they’re the basis of our reputation. I’d like to say “I did it” but the truth is, we all need a little (or a lot of) help from our friends in order to succeed. Read More

Getting Beyond Google: Simple Ways to Help Students Critically Evaluate Their Sources

If you teach a class with a research component, you have probably had students who use dubious resources as evidence to support their conclusions. You may have wondered why students continue to rely on Google to conduct research despite the many high-quality resources available to them at Tufts. This article by Jennifer Ferguson from Tisch Library will help frame why student research habits are not what we expect and suggest simple solutions for improving them. Read more

What is the Scholarship of Teaching & Learning?

In contrast to scholarly teaching, which involves reading about new teaching methodologies, reflecting on teaching practices, attending workshops, or asking for peer feedback, SoTL is the work of inquiry and scholarship about teaching and learning. As a practice, SoTL is grounded in reflection and the exploration of your students learning. Read more
